The family, without stop,

early morning was rising and the sun was being it as bright self. No birds w ere in sight, and the air was drifting through the l everover fragments of melte d glaciers. Not much was i ce was left, every bit of i ce was gliding away. The s un was now every animal’s w orst enemy: No more prey t or nor prey; the only pre

The sun was the sun. There was no hiding from climate change. Animals without homes, animals without hope, animals without their family members. The sun made everything that was left it's prey. Out in the distance, along the mountain side there was a den and a cave. Two polar bears and a white tailed fox resided there. These were the only two shelters still known. to be standing. The two Sun near hearts: Noah and Simon found shelter from the sun in their care. Noah was the father of his young one, Simon. All they had w as each other. Noah was sou mate and Simon’s mother was no longer in their pr sence; she had died three years prior while giving birth to Simon.

Simon never understood wh she had to die everyday He questioned why these things happen. But there was someone who was always here to answer his questions. JENNA. JENNA was a great and clever fox who was always around in a time of need. She was there when Simon was born. She also stood in the distance and witnessed the loss of Simon's mother. Silently she stood watching and shed her tears.
Before Noah and Simon knew any faces, they kept their distance from bones. For they knew they were competitors—fighting to get any food that survived the sun's violent rays.

But with the loss of his wife, Noah was in disbelief and began to become angry. Despite the competition and bumpy past, Jenna went to Noah to provide him and Simon love and care as they grieved. Noah had s Zak Calm himself down to fir St accept her presence. He senna offered a motherho to Simon that she had n ever been given herself.

Senna's parents had been named her at birth because she didn't open her eyes for five long days. Yet, w inter storms, predators an der her loss of some eyesigh t didn't stop her. She be came a strong, independen t, not caring. So there sh was standing by Simon. nd his father in times of need.

As a young boy, Simon was full of energy, and watching him grow meant everything to Jennis. One day, Jennis introduced Simon to a family of sea lions with a son who was the same age as him. The sea lions and Jennis became his second family and his best friends. The sea lion mother of the family was good for Simon, she would al Says go to the care to tal ki to Noah and Steven. She would tell them how since it was scared of the ice metering and losing his home soon. Nobody knew just ho w soon the ice would melt and their care homes would disappear. They were all very cautious of what the future would bring. When t hey were all young they we re all taught that the sun was supposed to provide h ice, not take hope away.
In these times of fear and sadness, Simon would tell his father and all of their friends, not to worry. Through his friendships, he had come to realize that together they would survive. He also knew that his mother, who was watching over them all, would make sure everything was alright.